Benefits Overview

Eligibility

Benefits depend on employment category, location, plan year, and insurer or vendor terms. HR publishes the active plan details and enrolment windows.

Employees should not assume that a benefit available in one location or employment category automatically applies to another.

Plan changes

Benefit providers and limits may change between plan years. HR communicates material changes before or during the applicable enrolment period.

Medical Insurance

Coverage

Eligible employees may receive group medical insurance according to the current insurer policy. Coverage can include the employee and eligible dependents based on the plan.

The insurer's policy wording, network, exclusions, waiting periods, and claim process govern actual coverage.

Claims

Employees should use the insurer's approved portal or support channel for claims. HR can help with enrolment and administrative questions but does not decide whether a medical claim is payable.

Life and Accident Coverage

Group protection

Eligible employees may receive group life and personal accident coverage. The insured amount and exclusions are defined by the active plan documents.

Employees should keep nominee information current where the plan supports it.

Nominee updates

Changes to nominee information should be submitted through the approved HR process. Employees should review these details after major life events.

Learning Support

Learning budget

Eligible employees may request reimbursement for approved courses, certifications, conferences, or learning subscriptions that align with role or development goals.

Approval should normally be obtained before purchase. Retroactive reimbursement is not guaranteed.

Certification policy

The company may reimburse selected professional certification fees when the certification is relevant to the employee's role and approved by the manager and People Operations.

Meal and Transport Benefits

Meal support

Eligible office locations may provide meal subsidies, cafeteria support, or meal-card benefits according to local arrangements. The available limit is published by location.

Transport

Certain late-shift or business-required travel may qualify for company-arranged transport or reimbursement. Personal commuting is not automatically a reimbursable business expense.

Business Expenses

General rule

Expenses must be reasonable, business-related, supported by receipts where required, and submitted within the published claim period.

Employees should not split one expense into multiple claims to bypass approval thresholds.

Approval

Expenses are normally approved by the employee's manager and may require Finance review. Some categories have additional controls or pre-approval requirements.

Travel and Accommodation

Business travel

Business travel should be booked through the approved travel process. The lowest reasonable fare that meets business timing and safety requirements should normally be selected.

Personal upgrades or extensions are the employee's responsibility unless explicitly approved.

Accommodation

Hotel reimbursement is subject to location-specific limits and the active travel policy. Employees should select reasonable business accommodation rather than premium personal options.

Home-Office Support

Eligible items

Eligible employees may receive a one-time or periodic allowance for approved home-office equipment or connectivity support depending on the active benefits plan.

Purchases should meet company security requirements and may require receipts and prior approval.

Company equipment

Company-issued monitors, laptops, and accessories remain company assets and follow the asset-return process when employment ends.

Claims and Approvals

Submission

Claims should include date, amount, business purpose, and supporting documentation. Missing information can delay processing.

Employees should monitor claim status and respond promptly if Finance requests clarification.

Fraud prevention

False receipts, duplicate claims, personal expenses represented as business expenses, and deliberate manipulation of claim dates may lead to disciplinary action.

Payroll Treatment

Tax

Certain benefits or reimbursements may have tax implications depending on applicable rules. Payroll applies the relevant treatment based on available documentation and current requirements.

Employees are responsible for reviewing payslips and raising discrepancies through the payroll support process.

Exceptions

Approval

Exceptions require documented business justification and approval from the designated People Operations or Finance owner.

An exception for one employee or project does not automatically create a company-wide entitlement.

Frequently Asked Questions

Does every employee get the same benefits?

No. Eligibility can depend on employment category, location, and the active plan.

Can I claim a course I already purchased?

Prior approval is normally required, so retroactive reimbursement is not guaranteed.

Who decides whether a medical claim is payable?

The insurer or claims administrator decides based on the active insurance policy.

Can I claim my daily commute?

Normal personal commuting is generally not treated as a business expense.

What should an expense claim contain?

Normally the date, amount, business purpose, and required supporting documentation.
