About TechNova

Mission and values

TechNova Solutions Pvt. Ltd. provides software engineering, analytics, cloud modernization, and digital product services to enterprise customers. Our operating principles are customer focus, ownership, transparency, continuous learning, and responsible use of technology.

Employees are expected to make decisions that protect customers, colleagues, company assets, and confidential information. Business targets do not override security, compliance, or ethical responsibilities.

How to use this handbook

This handbook is a common reference for employees and managers. Individual appointment letters, approved compensation statements, and applicable law may contain terms specific to an employee or location. Where a specific employment document differs, the applicable governing document should be followed.

Employees should use the latest controlled version available through the internal knowledge portal rather than relying on downloaded copies or old email attachments.

Employment Basics

Employment categories

TechNova may engage permanent employees, fixed-term employees, interns, consultants, and contract personnel. Access, benefits, approval authority, and working arrangements can vary by category.

New employees normally complete a structured onboarding process covering identity verification, policy acknowledgement, information security, role orientation, and required training.

Probation and confirmation

The standard probation period for a new permanent employee is six months unless the appointment letter specifies a different period. Managers should provide feedback during probation and HR records the confirmation, extension, or separation decision.

Confirmation is not automatic solely because the probation period has elapsed. The employee should receive written communication regarding the outcome.

Working Hours and Attendance

Standard schedule

Core business hours are generally 9:30 AM to 6:30 PM, Monday through Friday, subject to team schedules, customer commitments, shifts, and local requirements. Employees should maintain reasonable availability during agreed collaboration hours.

Teams supporting customers in other time zones may use staggered schedules. Managers are responsible for documenting team-specific schedules and communicating them before implementation.

Attendance and timesheets

Employees must record attendance and submit timesheets where required by their role or project. Records should be accurate and should not be completed on behalf of another employee.

Repeated unexplained attendance gaps may be reviewed by the manager and HR. Employees should report unexpected absence as soon as reasonably possible.

Code of Conduct

Professional integrity

Employees must act honestly, avoid conflicts of interest, protect company resources, and disclose situations that could reasonably affect impartial business decisions.

Bribery, falsification of records, misuse of company funds, retaliation against good-faith reporting, and deliberate concealment of material information are prohibited.

Respectful workplace

TechNova expects professional behaviour across offices, remote channels, customer sites, meetings, chat, email, and company events. Harassment, bullying, discriminatory conduct, threats, and retaliation are not acceptable.

Concerns may be raised through the manager, HR, designated grievance channel, or applicable ethics reporting mechanism.

Communication and Workplace Behaviour

Email and collaboration tools

Company communication systems should be used professionally. Employees should avoid sharing confidential information in public channels and should verify recipients before sending sensitive material.

Written communication should be clear, factual, and respectful. Employees should not intentionally misrepresent another person's statements or use company channels to harass or intimidate colleagues.

Meetings

Meeting owners should provide an agenda for recurring or decision-making meetings where practical. Decisions that affect projects should be recorded in the designated project system so that relevant team members can access the context.

Employees working remotely are expected to join agreed meetings on time and notify the organizer when they cannot attend.

Performance and Career Development

Performance cycle

TechNova generally conducts formal performance reviews twice each year, with continuous feedback throughout the year. Goals should be measurable, role-relevant, and aligned with team priorities.

Managers are expected to discuss performance gaps early rather than waiting for the formal review. Employees may request clarification about ratings and development expectations.

Learning

Employees may request training aligned with their role, project needs, or approved development plans. Completion of mandatory security, compliance, and role-specific training may be tracked by the company.

Internal learning communities, technical sessions, mentoring, and approved external courses may be used to support skill development.

Leave and Time Off

General rule

Employees should submit planned leave through the approved HR system and obtain the required manager approval before the leave begins. Emergency absence should be communicated to the manager as soon as possible.

The detailed entitlement and carry-forward rules are defined in the separate Leave Policy. This handbook provides only a high-level summary.

Company holidays

The annual holiday calendar is published by HR before the beginning of the calendar year. Holiday schedules may vary by work location and business requirement.

Compensation and Benefits

Payroll

Salary is normally processed monthly and credited according to the published payroll calendar. Employees are responsible for keeping bank, tax, and statutory information accurate in the HR system.

Questions about payslips, deductions, reimbursements, or benefit enrolment should be raised through the designated HR support channel.

Benefits

Eligible employees may receive medical insurance, life or accident coverage, learning support, and other benefits according to their employment category and the current benefits plan.

Benefit eligibility and limits can change by plan year. Employees should consult the latest benefits guide before making financial or healthcare decisions.

Information Security and Confidentiality

Confidential information

Confidential information includes customer data, source code, credentials, internal financial information, employee information, product roadmaps, security details, and non-public business plans.

Employees must access confidential information only when required for their role and must use approved storage, transfer, and collaboration systems.

Acceptable technology use

Company devices and accounts are provided primarily for business purposes. Employees must follow security controls, keep credentials private, install software only through approved processes, and promptly report suspected security incidents.

Personal cloud storage should not be used to transfer company confidential information unless specifically approved by the relevant owner.

Remote and Hybrid Work

Eligibility and expectations

Hybrid or remote work is based on role requirements, customer commitments, team needs, and manager approval. Remote work does not reduce normal security, attendance, communication, or performance expectations.

Employees working remotely must use approved connectivity and secure workspaces where confidential information can be protected from unauthorized viewing or listening.

Equipment

Company-issued equipment remains company property. Employees should protect laptops, chargers, access cards, and other assets from theft or damage and report loss immediately.

Grievance and Workplace Concerns

Raising concerns

Employees are encouraged to raise concerns early through the appropriate manager or HR channel. A concern should include relevant facts, dates, people involved, and supporting evidence where available.

Good-faith reporting is protected from retaliation. Deliberately false or malicious allegations may be addressed through the applicable conduct process.

Confidentiality

Investigations are handled with appropriate confidentiality, although complete secrecy cannot always be guaranteed when information must be shared to investigate or comply with law.

Separation and Offboarding

Resignation

Employees who resign should follow the notice requirements in their appointment letter and submit the resignation through the approved process. HR confirms the expected last working day after reviewing the applicable terms.

During notice, employees are expected to support knowledge transfer, return company assets, close access-related tasks, and complete required documentation.

Exit clearance

Offboarding may include laptop and asset return, access revocation, document handover, timesheet closure, expense settlement, and final payroll processing.

Confidentiality obligations continue after employment ends for information that remains confidential under applicable agreements or policy.

Frequently Asked Questions

How many casual leaves are available?

The detailed entitlement is governed by the current Leave Policy; this handbook does not replace that document.

Who should I contact for an attendance issue?

Start with your reporting manager and use the HR support channel when a policy or payroll record needs correction.

Can I work remotely whenever I want?

No. Remote or hybrid work is subject to role, business, security, and manager requirements.

Where should confidential files be stored?

Use company-approved storage and collaboration systems. Do not move confidential files to personal storage without explicit approval.

What happens when I resign?

Follow the notice terms in your appointment letter, complete knowledge transfer, return company assets, and finish the required exit clearance.
